Coronavirus update for our WellsTrade® clients

At Wells Fargo Advisors, the health and safety of our customers and employees are top of mind amid concerns about the spread of the coronavirus (COVID-19). This is a rapidly evolving situation, and we are committed to keeping you informed. Our thoughts are with anyone affected by the coronavirus.

Be informed.
To keep you up to date on the potential effects the coronavirus may have in the global market, we’ve created a Resource Center specific to this purpose, with links to relevant research and special reports from Wells Fargo Investment Institute strategists.

Stay the course.
It is important to not take any actions based on fear. Don’t sell your investments based on fear. If you begin selling your investments at the first sign of a market downturn, you might be able to limit your losses. But there may be tax consequences to selling, and you might also miss out on the market’s next upswing as well. Markets historically rise and fall, often without warning, which makes it difficult to try and buy or sell investments at just the right time.

Let us reassure you.
Our first priority remains keeping you well-informed, and meeting your financial needs while reducing risk. That will continue to be our focus as we closely monitor the situation, plan and prepare for a host of contingencies, and stand ready to take any additional actions needed.

Keep Connected.
Access your account online, 24/7, at wellsfargo.com. Log on or register now for online access to check balances, manage account settings, set alerts and more.

We are deeply grateful for your continued relationship with us and will continue working diligently to provide the level of service you have come to expect.

Thank you,

Your WellsTrade team