The Washington Institute for Poland Follow

Trump's Europe playbook just dropped — and Poland is sitting at the head of the table. TVP World has published an analysis of the Trump administration's new Europe strategy, and the message is unmistakable: Washington is rebuilding NATO into a "hub-and-spoke" order, with Poland as one of the hubs. This isn't reform through summits and communiqués — it's restructuring by invitation list. The evidence is the so-called Bergen Group. In late September, the Pentagon invited six NATO members — Norway, Sweden, Finland, Poland, Germany, and the Netherlands — to gather in Poland this October to plan the alliance's future. No invitation went to London, Paris, Tallinn, Riga, or Vilnius. According to Politico's diplomats, the exclusion was deliberate, not an oversight. This is the third meeting of the format since June.

Pentagon policy chief Elbridge Colby's stated criteria: allies that are rapidly meeting defense-spending commitments, have the scale to contribute, and are prepared for practical action. He calls the group an engine to "pull the whole alliance along." In plain English: Trump is sorting NATO into two piles — the ones who pay and the ones who lecture. Poland's seat at the table is earned, not gifted. Warsaw spends nearly 5% of GDP on defense, leads European military aid to Ukraine, buys American hardware, and has been lobbying for a permanent U.S. base — the Fort Trump proposal. This is what "burden sharing" actually looks like, and Washington finally noticed.

The panicked reaction from Brussels tells its own story. EU Perspectives accuses the Trump team of "deliberately sabotaging Europe's unity." But the unity they mourn was built on free-riding — America pays, Europe moralizes. A hub-and-spoke NATO isn't a weaker alliance; it's an alliance with a spine. Trump isn't breaking NATO — he's rebuilding it around the countries that earned a seat. And Poland just got a front-row one.

HUD Announces Arrests of Nearly 500 Fraudsters and Fugitives Secretary Turner applauded the work of Operation Clean House, a multi-agency, multi-month law enforcement initiative targeting fugitives living in HUD-assisted housing, for arresting 491 criminal fugitives. HUD Office of Inspector General (OIG) Special Agents partnered with the U.S. Marshals Service and state and local law enforcement across 12 cities to carry out this mission. "We will not allow criminal predators and fraudsters to use HUD housing as a haven or live freely on the taxpayer's dime," said Secretary Turner, a member of the White House Task Force to Eliminate Fraud. "Operation Clean House removed dangerous drug traffickers, rapists, and sex offenders and delivered real accountability. President Trump promised to restore once-great American cities, and we are fulfilling that promise by making our communities safer." HUD Announces Arrests of Nearly 500 Fraudsters and Fugitives | HUD.gov / U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD)

Donald Trump For President Trump Teases Explosive Pre-Midterm Move from Budget Hawk Russ Vought: More Important Than Energy Secretary If He Delivers President Trump just dropped another hint that something big is coming from Office of Management and Budget Director Russ Vought, and it has the potential to shake up the political landscape before voters head to the polls. Speaking at a Columbus Day event in the White House East Room, Trump singled out Vought and said he is preparing a tremendous announcement soon. The president went further, quipping that Vought will be even more important than Energy Secretary Chris Wright if he pulls it off. He added that Vought is working on something that is going to be so good for our country.

This follows earlier comments earlier this week in which Trump told a Maryland audience that big surprises are coming in the next few weeks with Vought and predicted the OMB director will go down as one of the most important figures in American history. Vought has already earned a reputation as the administration's most aggressive enforcer against wasteful spending and bloated agencies. Democrats have taken to calling him the Grim Reaper for his willingness to freeze funds, cancel programs, and force agencies to live within their means. With midterms just weeks away and cost-of-living concerns still top of mind for many voters, any major fiscal announcement from Vought could land as a concrete win for taxpayers. Trump has been rolling out energy and affordability initiatives in competitive states. Pairing that with a bold move from the man who controls how federal dollars actually get spent suggests the White House is looking to give voters tangible proof of results rather than more process stories. Vought has shown he can move quickly when the president wants action. Whether the forthcoming announcement involves further spending cuts, regulatory relief, or a direct benefit aimed at working families, Trump is clearly signaling that his budget chief is about to deliver something substantial. For those who have watched Washington waste money for years, that is the kind of October development worth watching.

Jordi Rose is in Fort Hood, TX. Follow While everyone is talking about Nidal Hasan's execution being livestreamed, I want to make sure we remember the 13 people whose lives were taken at Fort Hood. On November 5, 2009, Hasan opened fire inside the Soldier Readiness Processing Center at Fort Hood, Texas. Twelve soldiers and one civilian employee were k!lled. More than 30 others were wounded. The 13 victims were Lt. Col. Juanita L. Warman, 55; Maj. Libardo Caraveo, 52; Capt. John P. Gaffaney, 54; Capt. Russell Seager, 51; Staff Sgt. Justin DeCrow, 32; Sgt. Amy Krueger, 29; Spc. Jason Hunt, 22; Pfc. Frederick Greene, 29; Pfc. Aaron Nemelka, 19; Pfc. Michael Pearson, 22; Pfc. Kham Xiong, 23; Pvt. Francheska Velez, 21; and retired Chief Warrant Officer Michael Cahill, a civilian employee at Fort Hood.

These weren't just names attached to a headline. They were soldiers preparing for deployments, medical professionals, husbands, wives, parents, children, friends, and coworkers. One year later, Fort Hood unveiled a granite memorial bearing all 13 names so they would not be forgotten.

Now, nearly 17 years later, the conversation has shifted to Hasan's scheduled firing-squad execution on December 3 and the Pentagon's announcement that it will be livestreamed. That's obviously going to get attention. But I don't want the spectacle of an execution to become bigger than the people whose lives were actually stolen. Say their names. Remember them first.

No rest. I thought — tonight he sleeps. But Trump was not sleeping. Trump had just made sure America was secure. While most of us slept peacefully in our beds — Trump was working. Making decisions. Defending this country. After coming home from China. After everything. Still moving forward. 🇺🇸 And I thought about something that touched me completely. Most men at 79 — after 48 hours of international travel — would be resting. Recovering. Asking for one peaceful night. And Trump chose America instead. Again. This is not something you can pretend. This is not a show. This is simply a man who loves his country more than he loves his own comfort. More than his own sleep. More than anything. ❤️Few hours before he did something that's making America and the world more safe, and after the work was done, President Trump personally tweeted and informed whole America or we can say the whole world. Now I can proudly say We See YOU Mr. President ❤️😉.

TREASURY REPORTEDLY MOVES TO STRIP SOROS' NETWORK OF TAX-EXEMPT STATUS OVER A POSSIBLE $165 MILLION BILL

The federal government just put George Soros' empire on notice. Acting on President Trump's direction, the Treasury Department is reportedly gearing up to challenge the tax-exempt status of Soros' Open Society Foundations, along with the Council on American-Islamic Relations and the Southern Poverty Law Center, according to a New York Post report — three of the left's most powerful nonprofit machines (New York Post). A Treasury statement didn't mince words: "We are examining where tax-exempt status has been exploited, where charitable entities have become financial conduits for foreign influence activity, and how those entrusted with stewardship of these organizations have instead enabled violence."

If these groups lose their 501(c)(3) status and get taxed like everyone else, the bill adds up fast. At the standard 21 percent corporate rate, the three organizations would owe roughly $165 million for 2024 alone — with Soros' network accounting for $163.6 million of that total, according to a New York Post analysis (New York Post). The move builds on a September 2025 executive order targeting nonprofits with a "substantial illegal purpose", and officials reportedly want a chunk of the crackdown wrapped up before the midterms (Cato Institute). Right on schedule, the activist group Protect Democracy has already sued, claiming the IRS is being weaponized over politics — a complaint nobody on the left raised when the Obama-era IRS targeted Tea Party groups for a decade. Treasury put nonprofits on the same footing as banks: "Just as financial institutions must know their clients, they must know their grantees. That work is well underway."

Hiding behind a tax exemption won't save them anymore.

Brilliant Future

Dusty Wilson stayed behind in a wildfire for his cattle. The Morrill Fire was 15 miles away when he got word of it this March, and minutes later it was at the Lazy Five Ranch near Arthur, Nebraska. His wife, Brandee, drove their kids out. Delwin Wilson, his father, is in his mid 80s, and he stayed too. The two men went around opening gates so the cattle and horses could run. By the time they tried to leave, the fire had jumped the road. Embers were landing 100 yards out ahead of the flames. Father and son drove the pickup across a meadow to a windmill where the cattle had trampled the ground bare, a circle of sand about 40 feet across. They parked in the middle of it and waited while the fire went around them.

The Morrill Fire started on March 12, ran 70 miles in 12 hours and burned about 643,000 acres, more than any wildfire on record in Nebraska. A woman who lived near the Wilsons died trying to get out. Other ranches lost more than 200 head of livestock. On the Lazy Five about 90 percent of 14,000 acres burned, and the cattle and horses all lived. About 300 of the cows turned up together on one of the few patches the fire had skipped.

🚨BIG BREAKING | I swear on my son, I never imagined Trump would say these words to America's farmers today. And when I heard them — I honestly froze.😭🇺🇸 Trump arrived in Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, surrounded by green John Deere tractors and hardworking American farmers. He sat down at their table, listened to their concerns, and looked toward the people who help keep this country fed. And he said — "Our American farmers — we are with you 1000%." Then came another powerful line. "Or I wouldn't be here." He didn't have to travel to Wisconsin. He didn't have to leave Washington behind. But he showed up, sat beside those farmers, and made his message clear — he wanted them to know they mattered.

And when the crowd raised its voices, the chant was not just about one man. It was USA. USA. USA.🇺🇸And that moment reminded everyone that this country is bigger than any one person. It is about the people who feed America. The hardworking hands that rise before sunrise, plant their seeds with faith, work through uncertainty, and pray that the harvest will come. These farmers are among America's everyday heroes. They may not carry weapons or wear military uniforms, but they carry the responsibility of feeding millions. Their uniforms are work clothes and muddy boots. And today, in Wisconsin, Trump sat with these farmers and delivered a message of support — I see you. I stand with you. 1000 percent.

And God — looking at his face during this gathering, I thought about the energy it takes to keep going at 79. Only You know where that strength comes from.🙏😭 God bless every American farmer. And bless everyone who takes the time to recognize the people whose hard work keeps food on our tables.🇺🇸🙏 To every American farmer reading this — what does this visit mean to you? Share your thoughts below.👇🙏🇺🇸Make sure three people see this message today. American farmers deserve recognition, respect, and support.❤️🇺🇸

My Positive Outlooks

They could have built 9 mansions, but chose 44 affordable homes instead

When rising housing costs threatened to drive workers away, Maggie and John decided their next building project should solve a problem rather than maximize their profits. In Dover, New Hampshire, the couple had seen employees struggle to find affordable housing near their jobs. John, a contractor, and Maggie, an architect, recognized that they could use their professional skills to make a difference. In 2023, their vision became reality with the opening of Cottages at Back River Road, a community of small, independent homes. Instead of building nine luxury houses on the property, they used a special zoning program to create 44 homes on less than four acres. Each 384-square-foot bungalow features a kitchen, living area, bathroom, ground-floor bedroom, and loft that can serve as a second bedroom. The rents were set at roughly half the market rate for one-bedroom apartments in Dover.

"As a developer, we could have built $700,000 to $800,000-dollar homes versus building these," John explained in an August 2024 interview with faircompanies.

Maggie also emphasized the community behind the design: "I love the idea of pocket neighborhoods," she said, describing spaces that encourage neighbors to interact. Their decision showed how housing can serve a greater purpose. By choosing affordability over luxury, the couple created more opportunities for local workers to live closer to their jobs and build their lives in the community
